"Didi, a Woman's Life is Tension":

Attitudes Towards Mental Health Among Women in India

In the wake of the Movement for Global Mental Health, the mental health of women living in poverty has been constructed as a growing public health concern and one in need of global intervention. Much of the discourse of this movement, however, is guided by the perspectives of experts and what is missing is the voices of women themselves, particularly from countries in the Global South.

Dr. Saloni Atal is interested in the psychological aspects of women's empowerment in marginalised settings, which are under-theorised and understudied.
